Hudson Bay Route

STILL UNPROVED

Canada's great experiment in the building of the Hudson's Bay grain route comes in for a lot of criticism in an article recently published in American's Magazine.

The author claims the building of a four million dollar elevator at Port Churchill was a huge piece of folly in that it was unnecessary to build an elevator at all as the trial shipments of wheat could have been made with sacked grain, and even if an elevator had been necessary, one costing half that sum would have answered the purpose.

There is a deal of truth in the argument, for the wheat shipping experiment could have been made without building such elaborate and costly facilities for handling the grain.

That the route would be practical has been proved, and the cost of the great experiment should have been kept at a low figure as possible until its practicality had been sufficiently demonstrated.

Last fall two ships successfully made the journey with loads of wheat from Port Churchill to England. They made the voyage without mishap, although one Maritime legislator claims they got through "by the grace of God."

The length of time navigation is open for grain steamers, the quantity of wheat that can be delivered and loaded into ships during that period, and the interest and depreciation and operating charges on the huge elevator are factors which must be considered before it is demonstrated that the Port Churchill grain route is a practical one. In the meantime the great experiment is costing the people huge sums of money, and the government is considering the expenditure of other vast sums in the building of a rival route—the St. Lawrence Waterways plan.

Canada is paying dearly for her publicly owned commercial facilities.

GOLD IN THE HILLS

According to estimates of geologists there is about two million dollars in placer gold in the rivers and streams of British Columbia. That gold is there is beyond a doubt for industrial miners have been panning the river bars and making a fair living during the past year or so.

Unemployment has stimulated men to seek new fields of effort, and word that there is "gold in them thar hills" has led to the migration of hundreds of men. Reports from towns in the British Columbian mountains tell of scores of men going into the hills for grubstakes and prospecting outfit. In Calgary interest has reached a point where lessons in placer mining are being given to many men who are preparing to take to the hills.

With hundreds of men panning the streams and exploring the valleys of British Columbia's interior, who knows but that another Eldorado may be discovered this summer and fortunes won by the brave and adventurous?

THE NEW PROVINCIAL PARTY

The Drumheller Mail doesn't think much of F. C. Meyer's proposed new provincial non-party party, while at the same time it is proposing a belief that there is need of something to replace that which we have today.

The Drumheller paper says, "There is apparently no desire on the part of the instigators of this political movement to bring any new idealism into the movement. It is a mere personality rather than principle and it, as has been suggested, Liberals, Conservatives, Labor, and Independents all intend to have a finger in the pie, the scheme is totally impractical."

The Brownian government represents much less than half the electors of Alberta. Polling far more than half the votes, Independent, Conservative, Liberal, and Labor parties have only a small representation in the legislature. The situation is the result of the unwieldy and unbalanced condition of our so-called democracy.

As far as the provincial government is concerned, parties could be abolished and the affairs of the province managed by a business executive of twelve men, and managed more efficiently and more economically than by the present straggled members with the help of the U. P. A. resolutions.

The Week's News

JAPANESE PREMIER SHOT BY ASSASSIN

TOKYO, May 10.—Premier Suzuki Isokai died shortly before midnight from bullet wounds inflicted by assassin members of a group of military extremists who were responsible for a series of bombings carried out at the very moment the premier was attacked.

Bombs were exploded at the office of the Metropolitan Police, the bank of Japan, the headquarters of the day's (government) party and the home of the Lord Keeper of the Privy Seal.

At a clock this morning a hurried ceremony was held in the palace and the powers of government were transferred to Koriyoshi Takahashi, who has been serving as Finance Minister. Mr. Takahashi was appointed acting premier.

The assassinated premier, who was 77 years old, died at 11:35 p.m., almost exactly six hours after he was shot. He was the second head of a state to succumb to an assassin's bullet within a period of 10 days.

BODY OF LINDENBERG BABY IS FOUND

HOPEWELL, N.J., May 13.—The Lindbergh baby is dead; murdered brutally.

They found the body—it was hardly more than a skeleton—yesterday afternoon. A negro Police bellman four men through thick brush of the Sourlands—now five miles from the Charles A. Lindbergh estate—made the discovery.

Police were called. Identification was confirmed. A baby hunk, cautious and painstaking was found; a man hunk, wide-rung and intense, swept forward in its place.

Discovery of the child's skeleton was made by William Allen, negro hunter. His track, driving a long the Hopewell-Mount Rose highway, had halted, and Allen had left it enter the woods.

Brush and undergrowth blocked his track. He stopped and poked it aside. Beneath the brush, underneath a layer of rotting leaves lay the body of Charles Augustus Lindbergh Jr., only child of Anne, daughter of the late Senator Dwight W. Morrow, and Charles Lindbergh.

The body was badly decomposed. It is believed the child was murdered within a few days after the kidnapping. The baby was killed by a blow on the head, the skull being fractured. The child's body was cremated before burial.

Police believe four men and one woman are implicated in the kidnapping and murder of the Lindbergh baby. At the time the body was found Lindbergh and his agents were still negotiating with other the kidnappers or their go-betweens who were on the fishing vessel. Police are now keen, and as to the kidnappers is also being conducted on land.

KARL OF EGMONT, FORMER ALBERTA RANCHER IS DEAD

SOUTHAMPTON, Eng., May 16.—The Karl of Egmont, former rancher of Alberta, died in hospital here today from injuries suffered in an automobile accident outside this city Wednesday evening. He was 59 years old.

For nearly three years the "loosest peer in England," as he was called, lived in his historic Avon Castle, Hampshire, with his only son and his Viscount Percival as his companion. He discharged all the servants of the estate shortly after his arrival, and gathered his son established themselves in the huge kitchen of the castle, doing their own housework and eating their own meals. The Earl succeeded to the title in 1929.

The Earl and his son caused a considerable sensation when they arrived at the castle from their Alberta ranch. The father, a weather-beaten man from 28 years of strenuous outdoor life, seemed ill at ease among the splendid surroundings of his inheritance. The son, however, made himself at home immediately.

2,000,000 BUSHEL WHEAT TO GO BY HUDSON BAY ROUTE

SASKATOON, May 16.—Collected from dozens of country elevators a long string of freight cars loaded with Saskatchewan wheat will move northward over the Hudson Bay Railway this week, bound for Canada's new port of Churchill, and thence for the markets of the United Kingdom and Europe.

The movement consists of 2,000,000 bushels sold to the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, and will be the first commercial shipment to move out from the Hudson Bay port. While the wheat shipment is being assembled negotiations are under way for shipments of cattle and other products of western farms. Cattle owned by the government of Saskatchewan may be used in a trial shipment.

Last year as a test two shiploads of wheat were moved out of Churchill. When the present season opens some shiploadings were felt over the apparent lack of shippers in the bay route.

1300 MEN TO BE GIVEN RELIEF WORK

CALGARY, May 16.—Highway construction camps at Lake Louise and Jasper where 1300 men employed more than 1300 single unemployed men, will be opened within the next few days. Premier J. R. Brownlee advised Mayor Andy Davidson by telephone Monday morning.

"Five hundred men will be returned to the Calgary and Edmonton from Edmonton and when the project is in full blast it is believed that another 500 men will be given work."

The men will be paid at the rate of about $7 a month and board. All single men at present on relief, who decline to go to the camps, will be cut off relief, and not be taken on the lists again in future.

It is believed that the first call for men will be made by Thursday of this week.

CLAIM NOTED FLIER IS 'BROKE'; BORROWED $25,000 FOR RANSOM

NEW YORK, May 16.—(A.P.)—The Brooklyn Eagle today said it had learned from a source close to the heads of the Lindbergh kidnappings that investigation that a week before the body of the baby was found, Col. Charles A. Lindbergh told a newspaper mediator who visited him that he was "broke."

At the same time, the Eagle said, Col. Lindbergh said the search for his kidnapped child was being conducted personally about $200,000, and he had to borrow from a bank $25,000 of the ransom money paid to the supposed kidnappers by Dr. John P. Condon, Bronx mediator, and the "Jafie" of the newspaper advertisements.

NATIONALIZED RADIO SYSTEM BILL PASSES THE FIRST READING

OTTAWA, May 16.—Legislation establishing the necessary organization to set up Canada's nationalized broadcasting system was introduced by the House of Commons tonight by Premier Bennett and given first reading. The bill was preceded by a word of debate and a resolution based upon the report of the Special Committee on Radio.

The proposed act follows closely the recommendations of the committee the object being to "provide for the establishment of a commission with the necessary powers to carry on the business of broadcasting in Canada." The commission will be known as the "Canadian Radio Broadcasting Commission."

The controlling body will be composed of three, a chairman and two members for a period of ten years; a vice-chairman, appointed for a nine-year period and a third commissioner or holding office for eight years.

SIXTH INSTALLMENT

"Normandy has associations for me," the Creature said quietly. "I have never been there, but a great friend of mine who died in battle there, and I have always promised myself that someday I will go and see his grave."

"Oh—the man you told me about?"

"Yes, the man I told you about."

"How did he die?"

"He was drowned, saving the life of a little boy."

"That was brave of him."

"He was brave the bravest man I ever knew."

There was a little silence.

"That's the kind of thing Dr. Rathbone would do," Diana said thoughtfully. She felt a little surprised that the Creature should prove to be so human. "Give his life for somebody, I mean."

"Dr. Rathbone won the Military Cross in the war," Miss Starling said emotionally.

"Diana was silent for a moment, then she said, 'I wonder he has never married.'"

"We can't all marry. It isn't the only thing in life."

"It must be lonely for you."

"I think he is too busy a man to trouble about loneliness."

"All the same," said Diana obstinately, "I wonder some woman hasn't managed to catch him."

"To catch him? What do you mean?"

"Marry him. I suppose he's quite rich."

"Hans? He got a sister, or a niece or anyone who ever stays with him?" Diana persisted.

"I have never tried to discover it. I must be business."

"I think you must try and get a little nap before you have your supper," Miss Starling said practically.

"I can't sleep to order," was Diana's fretful reply.

"You can try," the Creature insisted.

"And if Dr. Rathbone comes wake me when it is all asleep," said Diana, parting shot. It would be so like the Creature to insist that she was not to be disturbed.

But Rathbone did not come, though Diana lay awake for a long time listening for the sound of his car door the lane. He always sounded the horn when he turned from the main road, and she had grown to know and recognize it.

CHAPTER VIII

The doctor came on the Saturday afternoon in the middle of a thunder storm.

Diana had been busy thinking about Dennis, who had called that he had arrived in New York. She was torn with her emotions at knowing he was with Linda.

The rain of the thunder had drowned the little sounds of Rathbone's arrival, and when she spoke to her she looked up, her face drenched in tears.

"Oh... Dr. Rathbone..."

She would have been less pleased to see an angel than him. In her eagerness she threw the bed covers from her and sprang up to greet him. "Oh, I'm so glad you've come."

"He laughed and took her hand. 'Glad! Do you always cry when you're glad?' he said. He strode across the room and pulled the window down. The rain was coming in and had made a little pool on the floor."

"He backed to bed and cover yourself up," he ordered. "You'll take cold."

He looked at her whimsically. "And what were the tears for?" he asked her.

She brushed them away with her bare hands as a child might have done.

"I think I was miserable," she thought, you never coming again. It seems so long since I saw you."

"Yes," he agreed. "It does seem a long time." Then they were both silent for a moment, looking at one another.

"Why haven't you been to see me all the week?"

"For one thing, I've been busy. For another, I thought you could do without me."

"Well, Diana said impulsively, 'now you know I can't—and that's all about it.'"

When they were silent, looking steadily at one another, while the rain rolled over the eaves, she said the stout walls of the little house.

He turned sharply away and stood for a moment staring out at the pouring rain, his big shoulders almost blocking out the window. Then he said, in a matter-of-fact way:

"I think you might get up tomorrow and have your lunch down. You must be tired of this room. A change will do you good if you don't order it. You turned around again. 'By the way, any visitors this week?'"

"No!" To spite of herself Diana felt she was flushing. She thought that what he really wished to discover was whether Dennis had been again. She said a trifle impatiently, "I don't think people are very fond of visiting you when you're ill."

"Now, if they don't stay too long," he told her. It would cheer you up, he said, of some of your friends."

"What friends?" she asked wearily.

"You must have dozens."

She shrugged her slim shoulders. "Nobody really cares about me, girls, at least."

"He suggested half-jokingly.

Diana was plucking the quilt to gather with nervous fingers. She was quite sure now that he was trying to discover something about Dennis, and with sudden bravado she lifted her head and looked at him.

"He is in America."

"I think you are with chagrin that Diana realized that Rathbone had forgotten all about Waterman and that he was genuinely mystified to know to whom she referred.

She said defiantly, "The man who came here—before I was so ill again."

"Oh... I see. Then perhaps it is as well he is in America," he said significantly.

The tone of his voice angered her. He was talking to her like a child. "I shall never love anyone else," she said, her voice taking a higher pitch of excitement. "No matter what anybody says." She passed breathlessly, but he made no comment, and she went on in the same way. "Aunt Gladwyn says it's a decent to love a married man, she says the modern girl is indecent. I suppose you think so too."

He ignored the last words. He said gravely:

"The fact that a man is married cannot prevent a woman from loving him, but it should prevent her—prevent them both—from behaving foolishly."

"That depends on what you mean by foolishly. His wife won't divorce him. He only visits her now, but she won't, and so—what?" She stopped suddenly, feeling foolish.

"And so—what?" Rathbone asked.

"And so," Diana rushed on recklessly, "he soon as he comes home and I'm well enough. I'm going away with him."

"I see. Well, if he's a decent fellow," she gave a little startled cry.

"I thought you would try to prevent me from going."

The ghost of a smile lit his eyes.

"I prevent you? Why should I?"

"Do you think I am doing anything to you?"

"No, but I thought you might try," she said indignantly.

He went back to his old position of leaning on the bed rail, his hands loosely clasped together before him.

"No lecturing in the world has ever yet stopped a woman who is in love from doing what may seem foolish to other people," he said quietly.

"You think it would be foolish?" she insisted.

"To go away and live with a man who is already married and who cannot get his freedom," he questioned. "Well, it all depends. In your place I would be afraid that if he had already married of one woman it would not be difficult for him to marry of another."

"He never loved his wife."

"That is what he tells you. That is what he has expected, in the circumstances you describe."

"You seem to know a great deal about it."

Rathbone stood up. He looked indifferently weary all at once.

"Then you must be prepared for him to grow tired of what, after all, can never be anything more than an ordinary liaison. I've seen so many of them, and they are as badly it seems a pity—they are too good to be wasted on that sort of thing as you call it. I wonder you don't think so too."

She said sulkily, but with flashing cheeks. "Only the other day you told me you doubted, if I was worth trying to keep alive."

"Did I? Perhaps I've changed my mind. Is there anything else you want to say to me before I go?"

"You're not going already?"

"I think I'd better—before I make you too angry."

"I'm not angry," she said. "If you think nobody has ever been so—so brutal to me as you have."

"Isn't 'frank a true word'?"

"Perhaps—but sometimes frankness can be brutal," she said. "I was sitting up in bed, her chin resting on her hand, and she said, 'her big eyes fixed on his face. But I like you,' she said again seriously. 'Whenever you come into the room it's like a breath of country air.'"

He laughed, though he looked a little embarrassed and took his leave.

CHAPTER IX

Diana grew well with much greater rapidity than either Rathbone or the Creature expected.

In a week's time she was getting up after her breakfast, dressing herself, and spending long hours in the tiny garden of the little house.

Mrs. Gladwyn sent her stacks of books and enough illustrated papers to keep the entire village occupied a month.

She also sent large boxes of choicest and expensive fruit which Diana gave to the village children who came to stare at her stily through the gate. There was no lack of interest in the cottage, only the long straight plot in front with a high clipped hedge that shut it out from the narrow lane.

One day Dr. Rathbone said, "I don't think it is altogether nice of you to encourage that sort of thing. He already has ideas far above his station."

"What boy?" Diana asked, though she knew perfectly well to whom the Creature referred.

"The boy from the Meadow Farm," Miss Starling explained. "Jones, don't they call him? He is only a pupil of Mr. Shurey, learning farming like any laborer."

Diana laughed in frank amusement. "But he's only seventeen, at the most," she objected. "Just a lad—and he amuses me—goodness knows there are not any funnier people in the village, as far as I can see."

"He is a very grown-up seventeen!" the Creature asserted firmly. "And he's a bit of a character."

"If my aunt was in the least concerned about my health or my morals, she would not have gone 35 to 40, as she has done, without even making me a four farthing I thought I might as well go to the village where she had been lying, and walked down to the gate."

It would be fun to go down to the village and see what sort of a place it really was. She opened the gate, however as she was, and went out into the lane.

Diana reached the end of the lane and stood looking to right and left, uncertain which way to go, and it was at that moment that a light farm trap driven by a lad in breeches and loose shirt open at the neck turned out of a gate close by.

He saw Diana and the Creature, and Diana rose to a standstill, and Diana asked eagerly:

"Where are you going? and would you like to take me with you?"

She had many friends, but Jones when he called daily at the cottage with eggs and cream, and she knew without any warning from Miss Starling that, had though he was, he was greatly attracted to her.

In a few years' time he would be a free-looking man. She quite agreed with the Creature for once in her assertion that he was a very grown-up seventeen.

457 CARRON OP
MEASLES IN CALGARY

CALGARY, May 17.—Despite health department activities in the schools and other institutions where children congregate, measles are more prevalent at present than in many years.

Approximately 450 houses were under quarantine Monday. The total number of cases reported since the first of the month was 256, 93 more than the previous week.

"We are doing everything in our power under provincial health regulations to handle the situation," stated Dr. Duncan Gow, chief health officer.

Dr. Gow declared that although measles appeared to come back in three-year cycles, this season, he thought, was the worst in his experience of medical health officer.

Terrific Waste by Soil Drifting

It is probable that soil drifting will not be as great a problem this spring in Alberta as it was last year, nevertheless, the menace will undoubtedly re-occur from time to time and farmers should use every possible precaution.

A measure recently passed by the University of Alberta University estimates that it would require from $150 to $250 worth of chemical fertilizer to replace the nitrogen lost from one acre by the blowing away of a layer of soil one inch deep.

The removal of one inch of soil from the best farming areas in the province wastes 300 lbs. of phosphorus, 100 lbs. of nitrogen, and every farmer who is troubled by this menace should obtain a copy.

WOULD INCREASE WHEAT PRICES
Hungarian Diplomat Urges 'All Producing Countries to Get Together.'

LONDON, May 18.—The catastrophe laid in grain prices throughout the world has moved Monday, Paul O. Hevey, Hungarian diplomat and delegate to the International Conference, to ask through the Times if Canada, Australia, the United States, India, and the Danubian countries cannot get together again and try to raise the world prices to an economic level.

He points out that as the United States is now doing its utmost to bring about higher wheat prices it may now be ready to recognize the refusal at the London conference of last year to take part in the creation of a world ring of exporting countries as proposed by Canada and Argentina.

"Higher grain prices," he says, "would at once restore the purchasing power of agricultural populations everywhere and thus help to ward off boom in industry and commerce."

THE PICTURES

The commutative activity of 'O. Arliss' has been brought to the talking screen for the fourth time by Warner Brothers in 'The Millionaire', which opens to-night. Thursday and shows also on Friday and Saturday of this week, May 19, 20, and 21.

Mr. Arliss without costume or make-up is still the master of character and diction. The dialogue in 'The Millionaire' is supplied by Booth Tarkington, a worthy embellishment to the original story by Earl Derr Biggers. John Adolfi directed.

Mr. Arliss' support includes Frances Arliss (his wife) Evelyn Knapp and David Manners, as the romantic leads; James Cagney, Tully Marshall, Ivan Simpson, J. C. Nugent, J. Farrell MacDonald, Bramwell Fletcher, James Cagney, and Sam Hardy.

"The Millionaire" is based on the danger of idle luxury for an active man. Mr. Arliss plays the part of a wealthy automobile manufacturer, faced by doctor's orders and his family's insistence that he give up active work. Unable to stand the enforced idleness and the apparent certainty that death is to eventually marry into the idle life class, Arliss finds himself a no waterer in life in a partnership with a young man in a garage and filling station.

Amusing and dramatic complications ensue, with the retired capitalist letting his wife against unfair the opportunity to play a part in overalls and service cap, a rather rare experience for him, but a delightful one for any audience.

"The Millionaire" is an engaging American comedy with Arliss in what we predict will be the most popular role he has had in talking pictures, not even excepting the now famous "Dianell" and "Old English."

Hale Hamilton, noted stage star and feature screen player in a number of outstanding hits, has one of the principal roles in "Murder at Midnight," a special holiday attraction coming to the Orpheum on Monday and Tuesday of next week, May 23 and 24. Two crime houses, one an expert amateur criminologist and the other a hard-boiled police detective, labor to solve the series of mysterious killings which form the plot of this picture.

"The Squaw Man," once a famous stage play and now a talking picture, is coming Thursday, Friday and Saturday of next week, May 26, 27, and 28. This great picture is teeming with drama and human emotions.

He Couldn't Afford It

That's what he said when asked about having some minor adjustments and small repair jobs done on his car.

These minor troubles later developed into serious ones, and his car was put completely out of commission. Expensive replacements and repairs were necessary before his car was again ready for use.

The old axiom about an ounce of prevention being worth a pound of cure contains a lot of truth.

Don't let that car of yours get run down. Keep it in good running shape all the time and you will be free of trouble and expensive repair bills.

Have an Expert Motor Mechanic and Electrician do your car repair work.
